CONCLUSIONS

Implementation of surgical safety checklists in Ontario, Canada, was not associated with significant reductions in operative mortality or complications. (Funded by the Canadian Institutes of Health Research.)

WHY CHECKLISTS FAIL

Operating-theatre staff at ten UK hospitals were interviewed about the barriers to implementing the World Health Organization surgical checklist. The biggest problems were:

Staff resisted or failed to complete the checklist.

"When the surgeons weren't on board you were told to 'Oh shut up and let's get on with it.'"

The checklist was inappropriate or illogical.

"It's a bit bizarre and there's a sense of, I'm not actually progressing the patient care with this question."

The checklist was thought to waste time.

"Yet more delay! Oh gosh, we're going to get less work done for the patients."
